BIMBLEBOX: art - science - nature

EXHIBITION  4 May - 11 June 2016
Bimblebox: art – science – nature exhibits a group of artists’ creative response to their experience of a unique and threatened environment.

Bimblebox Nature Refuge is located in a semi-arid, desert uplands environment in Queensland that is under threat from coal mining. This exhibition explores the impacts of mining, global warming, diminishing biodiversity, the changing socio-cultural dispositions of regional communities and the role that creativity plays in the process of indentifying and challenging these impacts.

The artists interpret Bimblebox - a unique place and time - and join efforts to save the nature refuge from destruction, or at the very least, to provide a lasting testimony.

A touring exhibition from Queensland Museums & Galleries, Bimblebox has been curated by Beth Jackson from a project initiated by artist Jill Sampson. The exhibition is rich, dynamic and diverse and includes installation, works on paper, paintings, artist books, photography, digital media and sound. It also incorporates aspects of scientific and environmental research and the social history of the site.
