

UNIVERSITY OF
NEWCASTLE

PURAI GLOBAL INDIGENOUS HISTORY CENTRE

Truth Telling Through Collaborative Research

Purai Global Indigenous History Centre is an innovative research initiative that brings together Indigenous and non-Indigenous people to explore issues of regional, national, and international significance. Underpinned by Truth Telling, Purai harnesses collaborations in creative ways, leading to high-quality original projects with global impact.

PARTNERSHIP CAPABILITIES

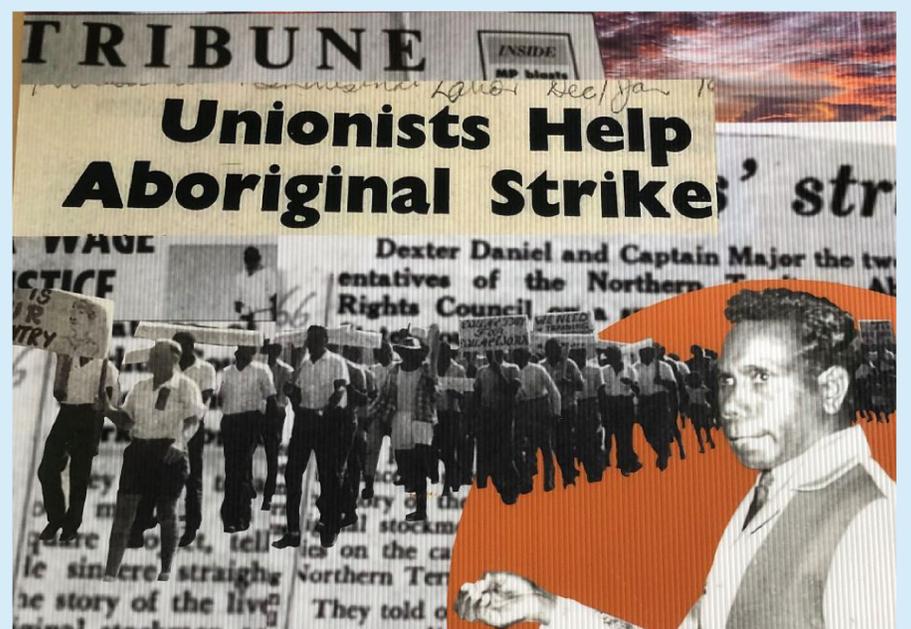

- Collaborative research on Indigenous history and culture with creative minds
- Interdisciplinary approach to exploring social justice issues
- Innovative project development linking communities
- Global perspective on Indigenous studies

PROVEN IMPACT

- High-quality original research projects
- Enhanced understanding of Indigenous Australian history and culture
- Fostering connections between Indigenous and non-Indigenous researchers
- Contributing to global dialogue on Indigenous issues
- Including and inspiring communities through creative research approaches

RETELLING STORIES OF ADVOCACY AND ACTIVISM

The Ngukurr to Newcastle project, an initiative of Purai, is about the advocacy, activism and networking of Dexter Daniels. It focuses on digitising and analysing the Copley Collection, other archives and community-based research in collaboration with Dexter's relatives and the people from Newcastle who experienced this history. By retelling these stories, our research brings previously hidden histories to light, so that ones of resilience and leadership can continue to inspire future generations.

CONTACT US:

Dr Jacqueline Wright

Centre Co-ordinator/ Research Assistant jacqui.wright@newcastle.edu.au

