

UNIVERSITY OF
NEWCASTLE

CENTRE FOR SOCIETY, HEALTH AND CARE RESEARCH

Transforming Health and Social Care Through Collaborative Research

The Centre for Society, Health and Care Research is dedicated to advancing evidence-based practices that improve health and social care outcomes. Through interdisciplinary collaboration, the Centre addresses pressing challenges in healthcare delivery, community wellbeing, and policy development.

PARTNERSHIP CAPABILITIES

- Custom Research Solutions: Co-designed studies addressing health and care challenges
- Policy Development: Evidence-based insights to inform health and social care policy
- Community Engagement: Research with diverse populations and engaging with health heritage
- Training and Education: Capacity building for practitioners and researchers
- Evaluation Services: Rigorous assessment of health and care programs

PROVEN IMPACT

- Improved Service Delivery: Research informing best practices in care provision
- Policy Influence: Contributions to regional and national health policy frameworks
- Community Empowerment: Inclusive research promoting equity and wellbeing
- Workforce Development: Enhanced skills and knowledge among care professionals

IMPROVING YOUTH SERVICE DELIVERY THROUGH INNOVATIVE METHODS

In collaboration with youth service providers, the Centre conducted a study evaluating the service model against best practice standards and assessing its impact on users. Using an innovative combination of research methods—including surveys, snap interviews, focus groups, most significant change analysis, and ethnography—the study identified vital elements of effective youth service delivery, supporting improvements in local services and enabling model replication across diverse settings.

CONTACT US:

Associate Professor Caragh Brosnan

Director, Centre for Society, Health and Care Research
caragh.brosnan@newcastle.edu.au